He is listed under TULLERUD as Kristian Evensen Kløvstadstuen, page 349 of Totens Bygdebok bind IV. That means that his parents were living on the Kløvstad farm when he was born.

In Norway he worked at a place where liquor was made (a breinery or still). After that he had a job as a church caretaker, cleaning the church and digging graves.

He took the Vang name when he worked for Lene's parents.

He emigrated to America on the "Island". They left from Norway on 30 April 1903 and arrived at Ellis Island in New York on 19 May 1903. This was the last voyage this ship made. They paid 776 Noregian Kroner for their trip. His wife and 4 youngest children accompanied him. The 6 older children had gone on ahead. (See the next page for more about the trip to America as told by Hannah Olson.)

They came to Westby, in Vernon County, Wisconsin, where they purchased a farm Northeast of Westby in the Town of Clinton. They farmed there for many years before retiring and moving into Westby.

Wang Family Trip to America

The following account is from an interview with Hannah (Wang) Olson about the Wang family history. Hannah was a young girl of seven years old when they sailed to America.

They were born in Østre Toten, Norway. Several of the kids had been sent on ahead. Marie (Sherve) was the first to come to America when she was 18. She came to Stoughton, Wisconsin to an uncle by the name of Tangen. After working she sent for Karen. Marie and Karen both worked and then sent for Katherine. Then when Ole was 18, he and Julia, who was 13, left for America, traveling alone on the ship for New York. They also came to Wisconsin. Dr. Shee got her to come to Westby, but she doesn't remember where Julia and Ole went when they first arrived. Julia went to Minneapolis to join Karen, where they worked as maids for some rich families. They were treated like personal slaves by these rich people. They later sent for Evan to come.

On 30 April 1903, Christian, his wife Lene, and the four younger children, Lena, Marne, Louise and Hannah left Norway. They landed in America on May 19, 1903. She remembers they went by boat down a musen (a body of water, Lake Mjøsa) to Oslo, where they boarded a big ship. She remembers her mother not wanting to leave, and was sitting in their house on her rocking chair, crying and crying. All they could take with was what they could get in steamer trunks. Each family took their own food also. She said both her parents were very homesick.

She remembers everyone was sea sick and could'nt eat. They just laid in their bunks. There was a terrible storm and tables were wrecked. She said the boat was packed and once people got over their seasickness, people would play fiddles and others would dance.

She remembers her mother telling her to stay away from the Finns and Swedes, because they had lice!

The ship was named the Island, and this was the last voyage it would make because it was wrecked. After three weeks they landed in New York and walked to an immigration place (Ellis Island). She remembers doors were locked. A man also gave her a candy bar, which left a big impression. They then traveled by train from New York to Westby.

She also remembers that their first teacher at the Clockmaker school was Aunt Alma, Ole Hanson's daughter and sister to Oscar Hanson.
